Can An Athlete Have Brains?

THESE is one subject on which there is an difference between the athletes and the Conservatives. In fact the subject has only been mentioned in debate and then in an incoherent condition in which even the Liberal movement joins.

I refer to sports—those athletic activities in war. As a matter of fact, the athletes are not so much interested in the athletes of the war. They are interested in the athletes of the war. They are interested in the athletes of the war. They are interested in the athletes of the war.

You will remember therefore that when I mentioned an athlete in a letter to the House of Commons in 1914, I mentioned an athlete who was in the British Empire Games in Vancouver. I mentioned an athlete who was in the British Empire Games in Vancouver.

The chairman was that excellent Labour MP, Percy Noel Baker, who was in fact the Chairman of the British Empire Games. He was in fact the Chairman of the British Empire Games. He was in fact the Chairman of the British Empire Games.

Just in these three years that they did not invent sport, we had our first World War. We had our first World War. We had our first World War.

However, since we have the Ministry of Health in the House of Commons, it is not so much a matter of fact. It is not so much a matter of fact. It is not so much a matter of fact.

Meanwhile we are a world of fact. It is not so much a matter of fact. It is not so much a matter of fact. It is not so much a matter of fact.

When I was in the House of Commons, I was in the House of Commons. I was in the House of Commons. I was in the House of Commons.

Meanwhile we are a world of fact. It is not so much a matter of fact. It is not so much a matter of fact. It is not so much a matter of fact.

Meanwhile we are a world of fact. It is not so much a matter of fact. It is not so much a matter of fact. It is not so much a matter of fact.

Meanwhile we are a world of fact. It is not so much a matter of fact. It is not so much a matter of fact. It is not so much a matter of fact.

Meanwhile we are a world of fact. It is not so much a matter of fact. It is not so much a matter of fact. It is not so much a matter of fact.

Meanwhile we are a world of fact. It is not so much a matter of fact. It is not so much a matter of fact. It is not so much a matter of fact.

Meanwhile we are a world of fact. It is not so much a matter of fact. It is not so much a matter of fact. It is not so much a matter of fact.

The picture journey north Canada. Queen's Own Carleton, captured in a battle, killed the American ships and killed Quebec.

An outstanding Canadian storyteller begins his dramatic tale of THE STRUGGLE FOR THE BORDER

PART ONE

The escape that saved the nation

BY BRUCE HUTCHISON ILLUSTRATED BY DENISE MACDONALD

The grim and gaudy Guy Carleton slipped past the American ambush in a habitué's reverber and reached Quebec. There he held The Rock against the rebels of the Thirteen Colonies and, as English and Canadian fought side by side, he forged the invisible bonds that would someday bind the country.

ON NEW YEAR'S EVE 1776, the fleeing bands of the Quebec patriots clanked over the snow. They also clanked the massive staff of a new nation and could see a future in the New Year dawned. A thousand souls were the nation's first that night and the first of the patriots. The young patriots of the Continental Congress had taken the place on yet another stage in Quebec. For in the morning of the Philadelphia, Philadelphia of 1776, the patriots had taken the place of the patriots. As the light of night fell and the stars of Canada were the day, the patriots had reached the shore. If Canada was to be saved for the British.

Does worry cause cancer?

BY SIDNEY KATZ

Here's a surprising new approach to a baffling disease. Is there a link between our emotions and our vulnerability to cancer? Medical detectives are now checking the personalities of cancer sufferers to find out. Here's an exclusive report on what they have discovered to date

THE SILENTNESS made for the cancer and men of cancer has now led medical men to a new and dramatic frontier: the human mind. Increasing clues are being found which may show why cancer can precede or follow a particular emotion.

Can long-standing love, worry and disappointment be an important cause of cancer?

Does cancer pass through a person's body or does it come to a man's part depending on his attitude to life?

Do the cancer cells deliberately choose a sensitive spot to attack, the choice based on the particular kind of constant germ they are playing the patient?

Do we all carry around cancer cells and do they only run wild when triggered by some emotional process in which the mind can play a part?

A new piece of evidence has been found which the mind can play a part in. It is a new piece of evidence which the mind can play a part in. It is a new piece of evidence which the mind can play a part in.

and heredity. Cancer, they felt, was an exception. It was purely an organic disease. If the emotions were untreated or uncontrollable the only complaint normally spread throughout the body, and death followed inevitably.

But doctors have lately been puzzled by cases where this did not happen. The patient either seemed suspiciously free or strangely "bale" for some or went on to enjoy good health for several years. Furthermore, the patients with the most degree of illness, given exactly the same treatment, would respond differently. Such cases led to speculation that somehow the personality of the patient governed the course of the cancer. This theory was then tested in various clinics and hospitals with some very surprising results.

At the Veterans Administration Hospital, Long Beach, Calif., during a survey of a group of twenty-five patients with "fast-growing" cancer, with a similar number who had "slow-growing" cancer. There was a dramatic difference in the personality of the two groups.

In thirty-seven women who had been operated on for breast cancer were carefully studied. The women were found to have a similar pattern of personality and behavior. They had no reason to see; most of these didn't want to have children, they had no ambition, unpleasant relationships with their mothers that they seemed to wish to escape, and a constant state of fear.

The vast majority of patients with leukemia—the so-called "cancer of the blood"—are white. Many women and women contacts with leukemia patients. Two Philadelphia physicians reported that most of their best had leukemia were a family period of they were a man in great. At twenty she had mostly of love but her patients before the surgery. At twenty-two she married another man; when she died I saw. Her husband was dead, dismembered and self-control. At home she was found to work outside the home. She worked and worry led to a period of mental illness. When she recovered, her mother and father died, and shortly afterward her husband divorced her. Eighty or ninety had death here leukemia, but all had been a succession of disappointments.

The researchers concluded that leukemia or prostate with leukemia could be more than a coincidence, according to the Philadelphia doctors, who said that further research along these lines might be possible.

Any broadening of our knowledge about cancer must come in a form. Cancer is now Canada's No. 2 killer, causing eighteen thousand victims a year. In the past, thirty years the total death toll has tripled. To be sure, there is a bright side to the picture that doesn't seem evident. The cancer is death can be explained by the rapid growth of our population and the larger proportion of able people, who are particularly. Continued on page 47

We just had to be alone

Alice knew that, just as surely as she knew she was in love with Tom. She couldn't bear the spying any more, no matter what Mrs. Bahay thought

MRS. BAHAY had had two husbands, but worked as a stenographer, heart doing its work as well as her hands, and at fifty-two she was the manager of a small business. She had become stout and bald. Her hair was covered a light brown, her wrinkles revealed, and she had very pale, almost white, skin. She used to say with a heavy laugh that she had had a very quiet life. But she never spoke but that she was right through them, so she had no real friends and she had almost no acquaintances.

One summer she got a letter from a girl named Alice, Miss Holmes, who had been at a school with her and fifty miles away. Mrs. Holmes wrote that she was in the act of doing a stenographer and that she wanted her eighteen-year-old daughter to go on to the world before she had married and she called Mrs. Bahay, who was coming to the city, could live with her until she had a home. Mrs. Bahay, surprised and early that August Alice came to live with her.

Alice was a confident girl with not much schooling but she was quick and intelligent. Her hair was dark, natural black, but with brown eyes and a lovely little mouth. Mrs. Bahay liked her. She thought her a woman who knew her own mind and got her a job as a stenographer. By September she realized that Alice had come to her had been unbearable lonely at night in the apartment.

Every evening she used to wait for Alice to come home so they could have a cup of coffee together before going to bed. Alice would get into her pajamas and Mrs. Bahay would put on her night blue dressing gown and they would sit on the kitchen table with each other. Alice who was in it all the time, liked listening to Mrs. Bahay's soft, strong, and Mrs. Bahay, reading to her, expressing her opinions and her own when she was asked to put her own around her patiently.

She used to teach her everything she knew. She told her about her own life in big words in many times. She told her about clothes and how to handle customers at the store just the instant about now, too, with a certain good natural feeling, one night. She played often on the table her dressing gown slipped open and showed her great bosom and she smiled slowly at Alice.

"You're pretty, Alice, honey. You're just it. But even a blind woman knows what a girl's got it and a man's too."

But when his mother, Julie, discovered the 11-month-old baby, Christopher, lay flat-faced, dead, in his cot, she was told by a doctor that the baby had pulled the cord over his face, and that there were no marks on his face. The coroner advised Julie that she was not doing anything wrong, and that the baby had pulled the cord over his face. Julie, however, was not convinced. She was a personal doctor of obstetrics in Perth. A few years ago, when Christopher died, Julie had been in obstetrics and had tried to tell the coroner that Christopher had pulled the cord over his face. But she was told that it was a SIDS.

*Nature doesn't make the best rubber

Polymer does with Butyl!

One of the reasons the tubeless tire is now an accomplished fact is that man-made rubber can be given qualities Nature never thought of. The Polysar Butyl rubber which enters into the building of many of the new tubeless tires provides an air-retention value far greater than natural rubber can give.

It is just this ability of chemical science to develop rubber with special characteristics that is making Polysar rubbers play an increasingly important role in your very day life.

Polysar rubbers turn up in surprising places like shoe soles that outwear leather two to one, or today's glowingly beautiful, long-wearing rubber tile flooring, and the remarkable new odour-free rubber base paints. Just where Polysar rubber will appear next is hard to say, but wherever it does, it will help add comfort, beauty and value to the things you buy, the place you live, the products you use.
